The Convention on the Future of Europe Draft Proposal of addition of a new article on “The open method of coordination”

Presented by Alberto Costa and Guilherme d’Oliveira Martins

New Article: Open Method of Coordination

1. Member States may develop an open coordination of national policies in order to enhance their effectiveness towards some European common goals, respecting the national specificities.

The open method of coordination is based on the definition of common guidelines or common objectives by a decision¹ [or a recommendation²] from the Council, under a proposal from the Commission and can include timetables, indicators and exchange of best practices.

Member States establish and report on appropriate mechanisms to translate these common guidelines into the national levels. On a periodical basis, the Council, on a proposal from the Commission, shall carry out a follow up of this process and deliver an assessment, in the form of an opinion³ [or a recommendation]. In this light, the Council may also adapt the common guidelines or common objectives.

2. The open method of coordination may be applied where the Union has no legislative powers, or where coordination is not specifically regulated by the Treaty.

Justification

The open method of coordination is being applied in a wide range of policies with relevant outcomes for the European convergence and integration.

The present draft article aims at translating and clarifying the ongoing experience by specifying the instruments which might be used in this method as well as the role played by the European institutions.

The present formulation also tries to keep some flexibility in this method to cope with the diversity of policy areas and the specificities of the national situations.

¹ Decision, according to article 24 of the Draft Constitutional Treaty, is a non-legislative act, binding in its entirety.

² Recommendation, according in article 24 of the Draft Constitutional Treaty, is adopted by the institutions and shall have no binding force.

³ Opinion, according in article 24 of the Draft Constitutional Treaty, is adopted by the institutions and shall have no binding force.

Finally, this article shall be without prejudice to more specific provisions in Part II referring to the coordination of certain Member States' policies.
